The first part of the larger north side from Porta Santa Maria follows the course of the Etruscan perimeter until the area above Porta Colonia where it reveals a sewer spout which dates back to the time of construction of the original wall. Charles Van Doren, writer, editor, and academic, made it his second home for more than twenty-five years. These developments included extensions of existing roads, introduction of aqueducts and sewers, the construction of many buildings, both public and private.

The eight meter long frieze Moses Striking Water from the Rock was executed by Merz, Pietro da Cortona: I seek Him and I find Him not. French text with Florentine illuminations written in Bologna in a library. Etruscans created the first major civilization in this region, large enough to establish a transport infrastructure, to implement agriculture and mining and to produce vibrant art.
