Excellent and interesting text on learning Shakespeare not only from an actors point of view but from anyone interested in how short a time Elizabethan actors had to learn their parts. If there is an end, it is obviously not just putting on a play. FromAudioPoemoftheDaySeptember The actors work on the play as a group just once before giving a public performance, and then only to address logistics such as locations of entrances and exits, and to practice previously choreographed dances or fights. They carried scrolls with just their lines and cues, not the entire script, and a prompter stood on stage to help as needed.
