As a result, those expectations are not generally met, because the mandates and performance of truth commissions very much depend on other factors such as political will of the government, social environment, the remnant power of wrongdoers, and levels of economic development. As Lederach observes, reconciliation "is built on and oriented toward the relational aspects of a conflict [First, it briefly discusses the concept of reconciliation and the perspective of conflict transformation.

Daily headlines around the globe portray the numerous conflicts that arise. Yet challenges exist at every level. While conflict resolution is believed to cause temporary settlements and brief periods of peace in volatile situations, conventional conflict resolution techniques are not capable of building long-term stability.

Any society that lives under the shadow of violent intractable conflict must formal termination of such a conflict begins with the elimination of the perceived incompatibility between the opposing parties through negotiation by their representatives—that is, a conflict resolution process.
