And if one thinks over that proposition it becomes more and more evident that life can never really be understood in time simply because at no particular moment can I find the necessary resting place from which to understand it - backwards. He also wrote several more pseudonymous books in Philosophical Fragments, Prefaces and The Concept of Anxiety and finished the year up with Four Upbuilding Discourses, Objectivity to the Truth, is an Object to which the knower is related. Hannay, Alastair, and Gordon Marino, eds. Christian faith is the only means for the immanent, temporal human being to have contact with the transcendent, eternal truth, since that faith consists in believing that Christ was the incarnation of God. Kierkegaard was the greatest Christian of the century But spirit can only achieve the synthesis of self if it acknowledges its absolute dependence in this task on God "the power that posits it". Sickness Unto Death.
